

April 27, 2022

I know, plenty of investors are panicking right now.

They're rushing to the sidelines, spurred by anxiety over inflation, the Federal Reserve raising rates, the ongoing war in Ukraine and now, with new lockdowns in China, a reminder that COVID-19 hasn't gone away completely.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average has now lost more than 1,200 points in less than two days.

You can see that drop as 1,200 reasons to be on edge or you can do as we're going to and see it as 1,200 reasons to celebrate... because it's playing right into the hands of my strategy!

Sell-offs may be steep, but they're typically brief.

Understanding that is the true key to building long-term wealth, as well as generating impressive short-term gains.

For myself, pullbacks like this provide a potentially even more explosive launching pad. One strategy I use is built on targeting great, innovative growth companies that have recently gone public... but whose shares have cratered.

And I target companies whose shares have tumbled not because something is inherently wrong with their businesses, but because of investor anxiety leading into the lockup expiration date, as well as extremely lofty expectations.

When I see sell-offs like this, experience is telling me to buy shares.

We can open positions at even deeper discounts than I initially thought.

This is an environment I'm always looking to take advantage of. This is an environment I think all investors should be excited to begin building new positions in.

Remember, we want to buy low and sell high, not the other way around.

I am here to support you in achieving your financial goals. Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have any concerns.

Respectfully,
